Ph.D. Course in Linguistics

The Danish language began to differentiate itself clearly from other Nordic languages after the Viking Period, i.e. after the 11th century, and since then its evolution has occurred at a rather rapid pace. The last 150 years have also been characterized by notable changes in the phonological system. However, it will be observed that the Danish language, alongside its numerous innovative features, also presents “unexpected” conservations. Both will be taken into consideration during the seminar.

Professors and students are welcome.

The seminar will be held in Italian.

Coordinator of the Ph.D. Course in Linguistics: Prof. Stefan Rabanus

Proposer: Prof. Maria Adele Cipolla
